"I chose to study Business Management as my primary degree because of its relevance in an ever-changing world. Studying Business would allow me to gain essential and transferable skills such as critical thinking, problem-solving and strong communication. I also decided to take a secondary degree in Social Sciences because I have always been interested to learn about the relationship between man and society, between nature and nurture. To me, it is a fascinating field that constantly sparks new points of conversations and ways of understanding the world."

I had the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to take up an internship in Uganda during the summer break last year. The internship was at Bidco Uganda Limited, a joint venture between agribusiness group Wilmar International and African consumer goods firm Bidco. My internship placement was in marketing and sales but the programme was structured such that I also got an insight into different aspects of the factory and how everything worked.

Part of the success can be attributed to the culture in SMU - the unique emphasis on projects and deliverables pushed me to consistently produce quality work.
